Preface

In 1991, a group of researchers from various academic and social services institutions in Hong Kong and the Philippines embarked on a project (the "Project") designed to study and understand the "situation" of foreign domestic helpers ("FDHs") -- mostly from the Philippines -- in Hong Kong. There was a need for such a study because of problems associated with the swelling number of Filipina FDHs coming to Hong Kong, the circumstances surrounding their coming here, and the conditions of their stays here.

In Hong Kong in 1991, there were approximately 80,000 FDHs, which was a great deal more than five years earlier. And, by 1996, the number had grown to more than 150,000 here. More than 95% of the FDHs in Hong Kong during these years have been Filipinas, with the remaining hailing from neighboring countries such as Thailand, Indonesia, India, and Sri Lanka.

FDHs, in particular Filipina FDHs in Hong Kong, have traditionally experienced wide-ranging, recurring difficulties in many aspects of their personal and professional lives. These difficulties include: coping with economic and other forces that prompted them to leave their country to move to Hong Kong to work as servants (even though many of them were educated professionals -- such as nurses or teachers back home); psychological and sociological adjustment problems in Hong Kong; oral and physical abuse by Hong Kong employers; inhumane working conditions; underpayment or nonpayment of wages; sexual abuse; breaches of contractual terms; absence of days off; and extra duties assigned outside the home.

The Project examined these and many other aspects of the lives of FDHs, their employers, and other members of society in the host and sending countries. Overall objectives of the Project included: (1) to gain a better understanding of various aspects of the plight of migrant workers in Hong Kong, in particular Filipina domestic helpers; (2) to formulate recommendations for improving the conditions of FDHs in Hong Kong; and (3) to identify related issues and concerns for further research and study. The fourth major objective -- documentation -- is described below.

Among the specific topics studied by the researchers were: the application of international legal standards to the FDH in Hong Kong and elsewhere; the efficacy of the Hong Kong Labour Tribunal in handling FDH employer/employee disputes; social relationships and hierarchies that govern the lives of FDHs; FDH organisations in general in Hong Kong, with scrutiny of the development and the community impact of particular organisations; adjustment problems and the social lives of FDHs; and, contractual terms of employment of FDHs.

Finally, an overall objective of the project was to provide a comprehensive and accessible documentation of the situation of FDHs in Hong Kong.* This Survey of Literature & Annotated Bibliography, in conjunction with a compilation of unpublished documents maintained in a repository at the University of Hong Kong Library, provides such documentation.

The Survey of Literature & Annotated Bibliography reflects the identification, inventory, collection and analysis of published and unpublished documents and other sources of information relevant to FDHs in Hong Kong. Materials cited in the Survey of Literature & Annotated Bibliography are intended to be used by researchers, practitioners, current and former foreign domestic helpers, and overseas contract workers who desire information for academic, practical or legal purposes. A goal is to facilitate and stimulate the research, writing, and practical work of academicians, students, human rights workers, activists, and others interested in foreign domestic helpers or migrant workers in general.

In collecting materials in the Survey of Literature & Annotated Bibliography, I canvassed individuals and entities in Hong Kong, and in other Asian countries. During the Project, I visited and gathered information and documentation from human rights organisations, Embassies and Consulates, domestic helper organisations, churches, University professors and librarians, other academics, and government offices in the Region. My research took me to Japan, Malaysia, Singapore, Sri Lanka, Australia, Thailand, Taiwan, the Philippines, and the Federated States of Micronesia.

My goal was to compile a comprehensive list of resources and make the list available to anyone interested in foreign domestic helpers, with an eye towards creating a repository for unpublished (and published, but difficult to locate) documents. Many of the documents identified in the Survey of Literature & Annotated Bibliography can be found in the Special Collection at the University of Hong Kong Main Library.

* See Edwards, George, "Methodology, Information Gathering, and Sensitivities related to Rights and Duties of Filipina Domestic Helpers in Hong Kong and Their Employers," (August 1992) (Paper delivered at the 34th International Congress of Asian and North African Studies; Hong Kong, 1993)

The Survey of Literature & Annotated Bibliography is organised chronologically, in sections determined by theme, source or type. Documents with an asterisk will be housed in the University of Hong Kong Special Collection. Full versions of many of the items listed in the Newspaper and News Service can be found on LEXIS/NEXIS.

I include parenthetical information in the entries to help identify the source or location of some documents. I annotate documents primarily when the nature of the documents' caption or title does not clearly indicate the contents of the document.

Comments, corrections or suggestions for documents to add are welcome.

We hope to upload the Survey of Literature & Annotated Bibliography onto the World Wide Web (Internet) soon. It is expected to be located at the Internet site for Law-On-Line! of the Centre for Comparative and Public Law of the University of Hong Kong Faculty of Law. The Internet address is: <http://www.hku.hk/law/law.html>.

I would like to thank all of the academic, institutional and individual participants in the Project. And, I would like to thank Andrew Byrnes, Ian Heffernan, the Mission for Migrant Workers, LEXIS/NEXIS, all of the human rights and domestic helper organisations around Asia who assisted, and all of the other entities (including various governments) and individuals who helped provide information for the Project and without whose assistance this Survey of Literature & Annotated Bibliography could not have been prepared. Furthermore, I acknowledge and thank the Hong Kong Research Grants Council for its support.

Finally, a special tribute should be made to all Foreign Domestic Helpers -- in particular those from the Philippines in Hong Kong -- who are the real heroes. It is to them and the families they left behind in the Philippines that this work is dedicated, and that this work is intended ultimately to serve.
